

Lori's Story:

Lori was a wife, mother, and soon-to-be grandmother. When she was diagnosed with lung cancer she was 30 years a non-smoker, but lived in a home with high radon levels. Only when Lori was diagnosed did she learn that radon was linked to lung cancer. She and her husband, Mark, subsequently tested their home for radon and reduced levels with a radon mitigation system. Lori passed away after a short battle with her lung cancer, just weeks before the birth of her grandson.

Janet's Story:

Janet is a mom, wife and grandmother. She has never smoked, but lived in a home with high radon levels early in her adult life. It was a huge shock to Janet when she was diagnosed with lung cancer, as she thought only smokers could be diagnosed with lung cancer. Janet and her husband Alan tested their current and previous homes and found that a past home had high radon levels; they were able to install a radon mitigation system for the current owners.
